Winter and Summer

Winter and summer are very opposite seasons, yet they are similar in many ways. In the winter, the climate is generally cold with temperatures falling rapidly towards zero degrees fahrenheit. However, summer temperatures remain in the upper eighties through low hundreds. The temperatures in these two seasons are perfect for a wide array of sports. For example, sports such as skiing, ice hockey, snowboarding, and ice-skating give people the opportunity to be active during winter. On the other hand, summer includes water sports, team sports, as well as hiking and biking. Both seasons also include opportunities for family activities. Family reunions can be held at all times of the year. Other outings including camping, picnics, and boating are reserved for the summer months. Conversely, snow sledding and holiday caroling are more prominent in the winter. Despite winter and summer's differences, they have many similarities.
